

With the idea of forming a band without musical boundaries or constrictions, Maxwell Fortin-Proulx (guitar) made it a point to collect himself and recalculate a plan that would crush his previous band in heaviness and breathe new musical life into the metal scene. He decided to form TripleMurder after going to college and finding out that Erich Mueller (bassist) was in the same class as him who he had tried to form a band with previously without success. With a stockpile of songs and ideas packed in his arsenal to execute, all they needed was a drummer and a vocalist to breathe life into the incubating project. After auditioning a couple of drummers, Zachary Le May had made the cut bringing with him a lot of modern metal elements and demonstrating the effectiveness of breakdowns.

The songwriting commenced and a singer was found in Mike Eron who brought his very intense vocal style to band rounding out the lineup in March 2019. Triple Murder is here to make listeners question what they think about pigeonholing bands into sub-genres, offering everything from chunky groovy riffs, to blast beats, to breakdowns and two-steps and everything in between.

With lyrical themes involving the state of the human race, politics and social media scares to just everyday life and human interactions, TripleMurder brings an in-your-face live show to the stage in a brilliant display of headbanging, jumping, power stomping, running and tons of other antics! Their first EP 'Pre-Meditated' from TripleMurder is set to be released fall 2019, with more material in the works!
